there are their books, and let them pass through the library at their discretion," he felt convinced that it was impossible to say what book or collection of books would suit a man, but was content to "bring the ardent and learned in search of knowledge in contact with books, and the two would well interest themselves together with the highest beneficial results." It is pleasant to come across such broad and sensible views, for they are a wholesome corrective to much of the cant and folly about the reading of "useful" books. Newspapers form an important branch of the Public Library, and here we find from the report that the supply is very generous, and the appreciation of the frequenters on a smaller scale. The newspaper-room is now regularly supplied with 377 newspapers, averaging last year 34,611 single issues, from Great Britain, the United States, Canada, South Africa, India, Fiji, Samoa, Japan, and all the Australasian colonies. The attendance, however, has averaged 500 daily, but it is expected that this number will be doubled under more favourable conditions in the coming year. The objects to extensive new circulation are also found of having a tilt at the successive newspapers, and it is gratifying to see that the public libraries are but magnificently resourced. We do not need the reminder of the eminent English statesman quoted above that "the progress of a people do some of the best work that can be done by books, and they are extraordinarily well," to recognise the importance of this section of the Library. We would only remind the young ones who speak of the "deplorable tendency" of the rising generation to read newspapers instead of books that they are by no means stating the truth. It is rather, owing to the facilities provided, that now have hundreds reading newspapers who before read nothing at all.

A question of more importance dealt with in the trustees' report is that of the choice of a site for the new Library building. This matter had remained in abeyance for many years, but it is felt that it can no longer be postponed.

At the back of 1881, a motion was passed in the Legislative Assembly in favour of building a library on the site of the old immigration barracks, now known as Chancery-square, a proposition that met with the entire favour of the Library board.

The board now, after the lapse of so many years, again makes known its opinion that no more suitable spot could be chosen. What makes this question particularly pressing is the need for a building that shall be ready to house the magnificent collection of books that Mr. D. R. Mitchell has offered to the Public Library. It has been urged by some that the spot selected for the National Art Gallery in the Domain, which appears to be a safe and safe spot, is too far removed from the city to be conveniently reached. The site at the top of King-street that has been proposed for the new Public Library would not have this drawback, for it would be within easy reach of all, and it would be difficult to find a site that would give more general satisfaction.

We receive correspondence from time to time on the subject of applause at public entertainments, particularly at concerts. The common complaint is that the applause is indiscriminating, that it is on certain occasions objectionable, and that it often interferes with artists who have to immediately follow the one favoured by the audience. Many persons maintain that the institutions of art and music are concerned, and that something should be done to abate the nuisance. Too often, they urge, it is only a handful of those present that persist in applauding the artists, and thus virtually take the control of the proceedings into their own hands. All concert-goers have been the unhappy spectators of such scenes, and though deprecating what takes place are powerless to do anything. Owing to the clamorous appeals of the encore-loving portion of the audience the concerts have often been prolonged to such an undue length that many have been forced to leave before the programme has been completed. Such scenes must prove a strain on singers, and the case of dancers in burlesque productions the repetition of these dances is in some cases a real strain, if not a physical impossibility.

A case is recorded of a young burlesque actress who danced a short but exhausting sallalero to the great delight of the pit, who demanded a encore, with the result that the young lady danced again. This, however, did not satisfy them, and they were not appeased till the stage manager came forward and informed them that the actress had fainted from her exertions.

Those opposed to encores have humorously pointed out the unfairness of the system by reminding us that people do not expect a doctor to visit them gratis because his first visit did them good, nor is an artist called on to repeat his performance because he has done a good service.

On the other hand, the same persons argue that the payment of fees is a second payment for encores, because they expressed their strong appreciation of the first he said to them, nor are we disappointed if a tradesman does not present us with a second article because we approved of one already purchased.

With the voice, however, an unwritten law seems to have force with many that approbation of one contribution gives the right to exact others. It might be supposed that the easy remedy lay in the hands of artists of simply resolutely declining all encores. In theory such a plan is adequate to meet the situation, but, alas! not in practice; for, to begin with, audiences or parts of them are inclined to dictate to and are apt to ignore, assert what they consider are their rights, and secondly to have to pay the awkward fact that the weight of evidence seems to show that artists really like encores. It might be more exact to say that applause is a keen delight to them, nay, an almost absolute need, to their peculiar temperament, and that as fashion, in the case of singers, has decreed that an audience shall show its appreciation by demanding the repetition of an item, that they love the encore. It shows them that they have caught the fancy of their audience, and this is for the time the goal of their ambition. The members of the artistic profession have from time to time made efforts to cope with the difficulty. Sims Reeves, for instance, made an eloquent speech to his audience, and strove to carry his man into practice. The result proved far from satisfactory. Singers were recalled, and contented themselves with bowing instead of responding as usual, but they had to appear again and again, until it was found that so much time was wasted that they were forced to give in. At an open in Kiffl the artists announced that they would not recognise encores, and at the first performance stuck to their determination, with the result that a riot ensued, and the police had to be called to clear the building.

It is evident that the great public has mixed up its mind that it will have encores, and there seems no doubt that artists appreciate the compliment thus paid to them. On the occasion of the production in Vienna of the "Marriage of Figaro," owing to the absence and later at a rehearsal of the company he said, "I dare say you are all pleased that I have decided that there shall be no more encores." They all bowed in agreement, with the exception of Kelly, the tenor, who said frankly: "Do not believe them, Sire. They all like to be praised, at least, I am sure I always do." Then there is the convincing story of Edwin Forrest, who once stopped in the middle of a scene, and, addressing his audience, said: "You must applaud, or I cannot act," an incident that Henry Irving referred to on one of his visits to New York, adding: "I quite sympathise with that feeling. An actor needs applause when he is on the stage." It may be this group that actors do as a rule dislike most, and Dr. Cook, of 26 Castle-street, was called in and attended the child till her death. A finding was recorded that death was due to asphyxia, and the physician added that the cause of death was the result of a severe attack of laryngitis, and the apoplexy is of the mildest kind. The French in their wisdom have recognised this need of the stimulus of applause to their artistic temperament, and have organised the claque, which, though an institution distasteful to English ideas, seems to supply a need, and has come to be regarded as an established adjunct of the theatre. It is interesting to note that the Japanese, a nation original in many of their ways, differ widely from us in this matter of vociferously indicating delight at a spectacle of any kind. Lafadio Hearn, in one of his charming books on Japan, has pointed out that it is not in accordance with national sentiment to express appreciation by noisy demonstration, and that even the military cheer is an innovation introduced at a time when, at which he was present in Kobe during 1895, the first on the occasion of an Imperial visit, when a vast crowd, without a whisper, stood and knelt as the Emperor passed; and the second remarkable silence on the return of the victorious troops from China. The soldiers marched under triumphal arches erected to welcome them; without hearing a syllable from the people. He asked the reason for this, and was told: "We Japanese think we can better express our feelings by silence." Even among English folk there are many who act on the idea that deep feelings or strong emotions of any kind do not call for an seemly clamour, but rather for reserve and quiet. It must be confessed, however, that these are in a minority, and that the great bulk feel that they must have a vent for their feelings, and that will be moderate. Particulars will be found in our advertisement.

THE FERNMONT STRIKE.

PROSPECTS OF A SETTLEMENT.

PERTH, Friday.

There are some prospects of a settlement of the Fernmont strike. A statement made by the secretary of the Lumber Union to the effect that the strike never would be settled unless the timbermen, though they are prepared to present themselves to become members of the union, has come under the notice of the Steamship Owners' Association, which recognises in this dictum a concession as much of the principle of freedom of contract as they require. Steps are being taken to put the lumbermen to the barbershop to ascertain whether they are willing to do so.

Steps are being taken to put the lumbermen to the barbershop to ascertain whether they are willing to do so.

AMUSEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

At Her Majesty's the Theatre, "Cleopatra" has been well received, and the success of the piece being due to the strong ensemble formed by the combined efforts of all the principals, the fine chorus and orchestra, the costumers, and the scenic effects, it is a most vivacious entertainment, and, of course, will be a favorite. The curtain rises at 8 p.m., and the Tea House, "Tea, Tomato, Joy," the sixth "Geschi" will take place next Wednesday.

Mr. G. Williamson returned yesterday from Melbourne, where he remained a fortnight in order to forward the preparations at the Princess Theatre. The "Princess" will open April 1st, and the first benefit will be given at the same time. Theatricals that please have been heard of for the past year by Mr. George Edmund. The kindly co-operation of Mr. G. Williamson and Mr. Harry Rickards has been most cordial, and the two men are now in full agreement in arranging good programmes. Mr. D'Orsay Ogden's benefit will be under distinguished military and municipal patronage.

MR. H. OVELTON'S BENEFIT.—Mr. H. Levins, M.I.A., presented over a meeting of the members of the Royal Society of Arts, a benefit to be given at the Royal Albert Hall on April 1st, prior to the departure of Mr. Gerald Coventry, who directed the performances both at the Casino Theatre, New York, and at the Shakespeare Theatre, London, and new chorus and ballet. Mr. Oscar Girard, the chief comedian of the company, arrived by the last American mail, and four of the American stars who have been in the "Princess" elsewhere—Moses, J. E. Ross, Arthur Jackson, Albert, Golino, and Alfred, Solley—will be present. The meeting will be held at 8 p.m., and there will be a special meeting on Monday afternoon, at which matters will be still further advanced.
